

ABSTRACT

A defibrillator test device is disclosed that uses a temperature response as an indication of a test result. The defibrillator test device receives electrical energy from a defibrillation pulse and converts the electrical energy into heat in a resistive member. The heat raises the 5 temperature of the resistive member. A visual test result indication is provided in response to a temperature increase of the resistive member.